Sabbath Thought

Introduction to the Psalms (part 4)

Wiersbe's Commentary

Hebrew poetry is based on 'thought lines' and not rhymes. If the second line repeats the first line in different words, as in Psalm 24:1–3, you have a synonymous parallelism. If the second line contrasts with the first, as in Psalms 1:6 and 37:9, it is an antithetic parallelism. When the second line explains and expands the first, it is a synthetic parallelism (Ps. 19:7–9), but when the second line completes the first, it is a climactic parallelism (Ps. 29:1). With an iterative parallelism, the second line repeats the thought of the first (Ps. 93), and in an alternate parallelism, the alternate lines carry the same thought, as in Psalm 103:8–13.
